➤ DSE II : THEATRE WRITINGS FROM MODERN INDIA 1

Optional • 50 Marks • 2 Credits

The course, based on Aparna Dharwadker's collection of writings on theatre, introduces students to 'theatrical modernity' in India. Comprising a wide range of writings in English as well as in Indian (regional) languages, later translated into English, the course includes essays, interviews and book chapters. The writings flesh out a variety of forms and styles that define modernity on the Indian stage. The course also provides a substantial idea of modern Indian society and culture through the prism of theatre and performance. Habib Tanvir's essays suggest how the theatre in India can be truly Indian in modern times. Utpal Dutt's interview to TDR and excerpts from his Towards a Revolutionary Theatre discuss his idea of political theatre and how it can be a weapon for social change. The selection from Tapas Sen discusses theatre architecture, stage lighting and the stage-audience relationship. Badal Sircar's essays deal with his idea of a 'minimalist' theatre. The essays are compulsory readings. The plays are additional readings to help appreciate the essays in perspective. For the plays, any standard edition will do. Questions will be set from the (compulsory) essays only. Teachers are encouraged to help students access the recommended readings, too, to broaden their horizon of knowledge in the area.

- Habib Tanvir - From 'Waiting for the playwright', From 'The Indian experiment';
(Additional reading: Charandas Chor)
- Utpal Dutt - From 'Theatre as a weapon', From Towards a Revolutionary Theatre;

➤ DSE VII : ENVIRONMENT AND LITERATURE 1

WILDERNESS AND NATURE WRITING

Optional • 50 Marks • 2 Credits

Course Objective: This course will examine various ways writers have presented the natural world in poems, stories, essays and novels. The objective of this course is to gain literary acquaintance with some traditions of thought about wilderness, nature writing and environment. These texts will help students understand how a personal experience can shape an individual's attitudes towards nature.

Course Outcome: The students will be able to understand the complex intersections between environment and culture, where human culture is connected to the physical world, affecting it and affected by it. The students will learn the application of ecology and ecological concepts to the study of literature. The students will understand several tropes used in ecocriticism such as pastoral, wilderness and ecofeminism. This course will enable a student to analyse how nature is represented in a text. This course will provide an insight as to how the concept of nature has changed over time. This course will also help the students to understand the importance of farming and identify the misuse of food globally.

➤ DSE XII : HIMALAYAN LITERATURE 2

DEFINING THE HIMALAYAS

Optional • 50 Marks • 2 Credits

Course Objective: The purpose of this course would be to acquaint the students with the nature of colonial encounter which takes a unique shape in the Himalayas, different from the dominant South Asian narratives regarding the same. Engagement with firsthand colonial records and travel narratives would allow the students to think about the idea of place making. How did the idea of the Himalayas originate? How do these meanings get transcribed in visual, textual, and cultural forms? These are some of the questions which the course seeks to put forth. Since the DSE would be activity based for this semester, students would engage in writing a project on these various concerns, which would enable them to conduct interdisciplinary studies in the true sense. A field trip to learn about the formation of hill towns, the transition from colonial era to recent ideas of tourism, plantation economy, would allow the students to engage with archival histories actively and critically.

Course Outcome: The students would learn about colonial history from the perspective of the places that they inhabit, and they would also be acquainted with key theories on cultural geography. The ability to conduct interdisciplinary research would be an added value of the course.

➤ DSE XIV : ENVIRONMENT AND LITERATURE 2

THE CHANGING NATURE : CLIMATE CRISIS AND END OF NATURE

Optional • 50 Marks • 2 Credits

Course Objective: The objective of this course is to expose the students to the nature and extent of environmental degradation that India is facing currently. The students will engage theoretically within an interdisciplinary framework to analyse the reasons behind such degradation. The loss of habitat, species extinction, air and water pollution, scarcity of food and water, forest fires are some of the problems India is facing right now. This course would help the students understand the root cause of these problems and identify different cultural and ecological practices in India that help in the preservation of nature. The students will get the opportunity to take a field trip and explore a vulnerable ecozone within India. The students will learn about the importance of traditional wisdom and indigenous practices and present a project or a dissertation at the end of the semester for evaluation. This course will be interdisciplinary in nature and will provide an enriching experience to the students.

Course Outcome: The students will get acquainted to several ecological problems that our country is facing. They will get introduced to several Indian authors who have written extensively on current ecological crisis. The Indian ecocriticism is in its nascent stage and the praxis will enable the students to carry forward original research work in this field of study. This course will help the students develop an eco-consciousness which is necessary for our survival. An overall understanding of the environmental activism, ecojustice and indigenous knowledges will be achieved through the readings and activities carried out during this course.

➤ DSE XVI : THEATRE WRITINGS FROM MODERN INDIA 2

Optional • 50 Marks • 2 Credits

The course, based on Aparna Dharwadker's collection of writings on theatre, introduces students to 'theatrical modernity' in India. Comprising a wide range of writings in English as well as in Hindi, later translated into English, the course includes essays authored by the famous theatre-makers in India. The writings flesh out a variety of forms and styles that define modernity on the Indian stage. The course also provides a substantial idea of modern Indian society and culture through the prism of theatre and performance. Panikkar's essay discusses dramaturgy in Indian contexts, laying emphasis on the body as a medium. Karnad's essays are a search for a new theatre language appropriate for a post-independence and modern India. Bhagat's essay is one of the first attempts to define Dalit theatre and show how it can delineate dalit issues on the stage. Hashmi's is a strong defence of 'the right to perform' and a brief sketch of street theatre in India from 1978 to 1988. The essays are compulsory readings. The plays are additional readings to help appreciate the essays in perspective. For the plays, any standard edition will do. Questions will be set from the (compulsory) essays only. Teachers are encouraged to help students access the recommended readings, too, to broaden their horizon of knowledge in the area.

- K.N. Panikkar - From "The alphabets of theatre"
- Girish Karnad - From 'In search of a new theatre', From 'Theatre in India'

➤ DSE XXIII : ANCIENT EUROPEAN LITERATURE 4

Optional • 50 Marks • 2 Credits

Course Objective : The Ancient Greeks took their entertainment very seriously, and play was a way for them to investigate their surroundings and what it meant to be human. The goal is to link students with the old worldview so that they can appraise the contemporary.

Course Outcome: In tragedies, we see the spectacle of human existence being exalted by the characters; lofty status and, more importantly, their high utterance. They are able to express our anguish in a way that we are unable to, yet they are nonetheless recognizable as a representation of our own world, issues, and sufferings. Students are expected to develop apply the worldview of their personal and contemporary situations.

➤ DSE XXIV : THEATRE WRITINGS FROM MODERN INDIA 3

Optional • 50 Marks • 2 Credits

The course, based on Aparna Dharwadker's collection of writings on theatre, introduces students to 'theatrical modernity' in India. It introduces students to the emergence of outstanding women playwrights and directors towards the end of the twentieth century and acquaints them with the radical language they experimented with. Women's theatre since the 1990s has added a new chapter to the experimental theatre in India. All three essays here ask questions from the perspectives of women directors, which were seldom asked before: on theme, plot, character, setting, material, sound, text, nonverbal properties and dramaturgy.

The essays are compulsory readings. The plays are additional readings to help appreciate the essays in perspective. For the plays, any standard edition will do. Questions will be set from the (compulsory) essays only. Teachers are encouraged to help students access the recommended readings, too, to broaden their horizon of knowledge in the area.

GENERAL ELECTIVES (any one)

➤ GE IV : PLASTIC HUMANITIES II

Optional • 100 Marks • 4 Credits

Course Objective: Plastic humanities in this course talks about critical philosophy, the discipline of psychoanalysis, the ecology and materialist poetics of plastic. The readings get divided into Catherine Malabou's exposition of the philosophy of plasticity that works through Kantian epigenesis, Hegelian phenomenology and a deep engagement with Heidegger, Deleuze and Derrida. It also talks about how psychoanalysis of Freud gets invested through neuroplasticity, that brings neurology, brain studies, trauma and other issues into play. The course looks into plastic ecology in environmental humanities connecting literature with plastic, and plastic with Anthropocene and posthumanism. The final part of the course speaks about the material-aesthetic of plastic something that has come to change what we call "plastic reading". This is the "plastic turn", a term that is introduced into the vocabulary of our studies in the humanities by Ranjan Ghosh and his work on how plastic humanities can benefit from plasticity as a philosophy, plastic as a material, plasticity and non-plasticity of plastic.

Course Outcome: In extension of the Paper I, here plastic becomes a kind of a material-aesthetic understanding of the humanities, where our understanding of the material and its behaviour can change the way we read literature and other disciplines. The course here stands at the crossroad of the sciences and humanities and can change the way we look at our disciplinization of subjects and the idea of transdisciplinarity.
